Tote Fair With The Printer

Before you send your printing away from home you ought to reflect that the local newspaper performs a thousand services for you and the community that are never charged against anybody. There is a general idea that newspapers are under obligations to do those things because they live off the public. But really no such obligation exists, for the newspaper does not derive its livelihood from its subscribers. Its columns are loaded with material for which it receives no revenue directly or indirectly. Even its home advertisers do not constitute its greatest support. The combined advertising of all the merchants in Piedmont for an entire year would not pay the Banners expenses for a single month. Out-of-town and legal advertising far exceed home advertising.

So it is only when you throw your job printing to the local paper that you compensate it for the support it lends to home interests, churches, schools and public advancement. You have been wrong in thinking that all the obligation is on the editor's part and none on your own.

Don't send your printing to St. Louis. But if you do, be decent enough to have the St. Louis printer also publish your town boosts, social and news items, obituaries, etc.

Get your printing and your puffs at the same place.—Piedmont Banner.
